At Dr. Konstantin's Manhattan, NYC practice, a brow lift (often called a forehead lift) is a popular surgical procedure designed to rejuvenate the upper part of the face by restoring a youthful eyebrow contour and position. It can also help to smooth out deep creases across the forehead and get rid of the excessive fullness and droopy skin over upper eyelids.

If you're interested in learning whether a brow lift at Dr. Konstantin's New York City practice is right for you, contact us online for a consultation, or call \(212\) 380-3634 to speak to a member of our team.

Modern Rejuvenation Techniques

Dr. Konstantin can use a number of surgical and non-surgical techniques to improve the contour and position of the brow. Below are some of his most commonly used methods.

Direct Brow Lift

In the past, the preferred method of brow rejuvenation involved making a long incision around the head and pulling the brows upward while removing a strip of skin. This method involved a significant amount of surgery and required a longer recovery time. Today, direct brow lifts are rarely used for cosmetic brow rejuvenation as several other less invasive techniques have been developed.

Endoscopic Brow Lift

Dr. Konstantin performs most brow lifts today with the aid of a small camera called an endoscope. He inserts the camera through a small incision within the hair-bearing part of the scalp. The endoscope aids with visualization of the brow-supporting structures and enables a significantly less invasive surgery.

After releasing the underlying tissue, Dr. Konstantin elevates the brows to the desired position and fixes them in place. This procedure can be performed without using general anesthesia, and the recovery is far shorter than with a direct brow lift.
